| Five sheets of pure gold..... | 625 |
| Ten-carat gold stock..... | 300 |
| Cash..... | 175 |
| Unfinished jewelry..... | 1,250 |
| Dies and samples of emblems, watch chains, &c..... | 2,000 |

Nobody in the neighborhood could be found who had heard the explosion or the "separate explosion," if they came separately. David E. Havoletta, the patrolman on post, passed the building several times between midnight and the time the porter first told him of the Twenty-second, in the Harlem Court-to-day.

"Um, your Honor, wouldn't some other day do?" inquired the Assemblyman.

"My client can appear at any time, as you wish," said the judge.

"Don't you not the 11th?" asked the Magistrate.

"Well, you see, I'm—well, the fact is, if I must tell it, I'm to be married on that day," blurted out the Assemblyman, who batted long for the 5-cent fare ball, turning the color of a B. R. T. pink transfer.

So the Magistrate made it the 10th. The Assemblyman was urged to tell some more details about the wedding.

"I can't tell you more," said the Assemblyman, who said that the young woman's name was Margaret McKilligan and that she lived at No. 26 Sullivan street, Brooklyn.

"No, I don't know where the wedding is to be held," said the Assemblyman, "and I don't know who the bridegroom is, or who the best man will be or anything," shouted the Assemblyman. "Wagner to his pursuers as he swung onto a Third Avenue car."

Application was made to Supreme Court Justice Tompkins at White Plains to-day by a lawyer representing Harry K. Thaw, who is now in the Poughkeepsie Jail, for an order substituting A. Russell Peabody as attorney in person for Thaw in place of Lawyer Graham, of Newburg. County Judge Seager, of Newburg, appeared for Mr. Graham and opposed the substitution until Thaw had paid Graham for his services in conducting the hearing before Judge Seager. When Thaw sought to secure his release from Matteawan Asylum, Judge Seager said that Thaw owed Lawyer Graham $2,500 for his service and that he has brought suit against the prisoner to collect it. Lawyer Peabody desires to appeal from the decision of Justice Mott, of Newburgh, that Thaw is sane. Thaw said that he has substituted Justice Tompkins took the papers and reserved his decision.

BATTERED DOOR

duced such small results. One might conclude this baby was doing in better within the arms of the law? Like a tear-stained cherub she stands lifting a wan, little face to listen to what the law files about parents who allow their children to wander into swinging-door cafes. So the Mrs. Gouldman drinks too much. Bless you, she insists the child had wandered away, and it wasn't her fault if she's been found in the corner saloon. But the cherubic infant is sent back to the rooms of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty until further investigation can be made.

Stole Bread for Mother.

Antonio Smezzo is the next upon the calendar. The pallid group beyond the black door opens and a weazened Italian boy appears. Carrying in his arms that little bread, not much smaller than himself. In the next room a faded woman in a faded gown starts forward, but is restrained by a brown-games, Moran said:

"This is a blooming lot of amateurs; there is plenty of English to play among us professionals."

Moran said this child was a victim of the victim of any retaliatory tactics. He said that American in London was a plain ignorance on the of the officials more than any petty prejudice.

"COP" HOLDS UP GOV. GUILD

LYNN, Mass., July 25.—While planning on the boulevard to fulfill a social engagement yesterday, Gov. Curtis Guild, Jr., was held up by a policeman for oversteering, after a long chase. When the policeman's machine he waved a warning to the chauffeur, who stopped in the chauffeur whistled a few words in Italian. The governor was warned. He looked hard and saw it was the Governor. He then whispered back to the chauffeur, who then drove off. He then, knowingly, got out and cranked the car again, started the chauffeur and Governor on the way.

The Controller on the ground that they would be too extensive an undertaking for the city, the plan for the new second Precinct station house were to day submitted to Commissioner Bingham, and work on the structure probably will be begun in a short time.

The Comptroller's office said that $500,000 was the estimated cost of such a building as Bingham planned could be erected. The Commissioner thought about $225,000 would be sufficient for the bids were opened yesterday it was found that the highest bid was $219,000 and the lowest $190,000. The new station house will occupy a site on Greenwich between Cortland and Liberty streets.

750 LOOKING FOR WORK.

Members of the committee of trade unionists, who have headquarters at No. 31 Duane street, said yesterday they had the names of 750 men, skilled and unskilled, who need employment.

"We are looking for employers," said J. Eads How, the leader, "who will give work to these men. They are willing to take any job."

have stirred him out all day each day, but Eugene, his son, refused to take notes on the lives of his neighbors. For the two weeks and slept until late. The news of Bingham's order brought half a dozen vigorous complaints to Mulherry street.

Detective Corrikan arrived at the house last night and gathered in Blummenh and his five pets. He took them to the west Forty-seventh street and to-day arraigned them at the West Side Court.

"What!" exclaimed Magistrate Breen "does the Commissioner expect to send a rooster to the laws of the carin case?"

Blummenh charged this man with violating the sanitary code by keeping roosters in his house.

Blummenh was held in $100 for trial and started out of court.

"What will I do with the evidence?" asked the magistrate.

"Put them in cold storage," said the court.

Blummenh, however, volunteered to take the evidence and ship it to the country.
